Dear Ms. Dortch:

On May 14, 2014, Scott Townley, Max Solondz, Leora Hochstein and Andy Lachance of Verizon had a teleconference with Roger Noel and Tom Derenge of the FCC's Wireless Bureau, Mobility Division. We discussed AT&T's Petition seeking to amend Section 22.913 of the Commission's rules¹ to adopt power spectral density ("PSD") limits (stated as Watts/MHz) to facilitate deploying broadband technologies such as LTE in the cellular bands.² In reply comments addressing the AT&T Petition, Verizon supported amending the cellular rules to adopt PSD limits, but proposed that the Commission adopt higher PSD limits equivalent to those adopted for use in the 700 MHz Upper C Band.³ Verizon also proposed that the Commission adopt power flux density limits equivalent to those adopted for use in the 700 MHz Upper C Band⁴ to mitigate the potential for interference to adjacent licensees.⁵ During the conversation, Verizon discussed the
